CREW Neil A. Armstrong, Michael Collins, Edwin "Buzz" S. Aldrin Jr.

CHAPTER 3: PROJECT APOLLO

Marking the first human landing on the Moon, this mission made good on the promise of President John F. Kennedy to reach the Moon by the end of the decade, "and return [sic] safely to the Earth." Six hours after landing on the lunar surface on July 20, astronauts Neil Armstrong and Buzz Aldrin set foot on the lunar surface. Armstrong's words were immortal: "That's one small step for man— one giant leap for mankind." The two spent two and a half hours during this moonwalk, planting an American flag, but they avoided claiming the land for the U.S. as had been routinely done during European exploration of the Americas. Instead, they unveiled a plaque bearing the inscription:

"Here Man from Planet Earth First Set Foot Upon the Moon, July 1969 A.D. We Came in Peace for All Mankind."

The crew and NASA leaders took special care for the design of the Apollo 11 mission patch. They wanted something elegant that would stand the test of time. Astronaut Jim Lovell suggested featuring a bald eagle on the patch, and Collins found one in a National Geographic book, staring at over a lunar landscape. Armstrong and Collins also wanted to capture the peaceful nature of the space mission, so they agreed when Tom Wilson, a computer expert and the Apollo 11 simulator instructor, suggested adding an olive branch to the eagle's beak. NASA artist James Cooper executed the final design that went forward for NASA approval. Robert Gilmore, Manned Spacecraft Center Director, refused to authorize the design, however, until the eagle was redrawn to look less ferocious and hostile. The olive branch was placed in the eagle's talons and the expression made a little less menacing. Collins thought the change unnecessary, revealing that the new design made the eagle look "uncomfortable" rather than stately.

In one of the most iconic images of Apollo 11, the astronaut plants the American flag on the lunar surface, July 20, 1969. For a generation of Americans, this photograph symbolized the sense of national pride in the success of the Moon landing.
